DealLocker.com has the coupon codes you need to save money shopping online

Yesterday, my husband brought an article in the Free Lance Star newspaper to my attention. The article, about a site named DealLocker.com, was written by national newspaper columnist, Craig Crossman, who also happens to host Computer America, the No. 1 daily computer talk show. In this article, Craig Crossman explains the DealLocker.com site, as well as some of its nicer features, which includes Secret Amazon Discount tool, which allows you to search Amazon based on the discount offered. Another nice feature is the Typo Buddy, which helps you search for things on eBay and Craigslist that are misspelled, which can help you net something nice without many other bidders in the mix.

DealLocker.com has such a following that many companies are providing DealLocker.com with on line codes, ones that are guaranteed to work for you. The site also offers a submission form for you to submit a new code, if you notice it is not in the list and you happen to have it. The premise here is friends helping friends get a good deal. So the next time you are shopping on line, make sure you zip over to DealLocker.com and search for a discount code. You may be quite surprised at how much money you can save. Why pay full price when you don't have to?
